NIPCC recently awarded a $65,000 grant to the Auckland branch of the Red Cross to fund an initiative to reduce the risk of children being harmed or killed by firearms. Auckland could become the first city in the country to involve all schools in a program to reduce the risk of children being harmed by firearms. The programme encourages action on safety, injury awareness and resilience. The Red Cross hopes to have the project running in the region's public and private schools before the Christmas break. The funding will enable the Red Cross to provide a range of free programmes for all schools in the Auckland region. The programme will be delivered by a team of trained volunteers from the Red Cross' Injured Children Survivor Support programme. The three-hour sessions will inform students about what to do if they find a firearm in their school, develop resilience skills and teach what to do if they are involved in a shooting incident. "The Auckland Red Cross is very proud to be able to offer this project and support the Auckland community through the provision of support programs to its young people," said Auckland branch manager Andrew Moloney. "The Red Cross is committed to promoting safety and wellbeing for children, young people and their families in the Auckland region. "Our Injured Children Survivor Support programme focuses on giving support, providing information and coping skills to people who have been injured or involved in a shooting incident. "The project is another example of our commitment to being a first-class service provider to the community," Mr Moloney said. NIPCC's role in a child's development is to help change attitudes, norms and risk-taking behaviour that contributes to
