What's New in the Search Wizard?

After installation, Search Wizard will appear as a new toolbar in Google Desktop Search Sidebar. From here you can: ⬜ Perform advanced web searches ⬜ Set a default search string (if used only once) ⬜ Perform local searches on your hard drive, using file types ⬜ Perform site searches Search Wizard is a freeware tool. @Jim Gustafson - Thank you for the tip about embedding a search box on the page. In the last update of this tool, I decided to add the Search Wizard feature into this tool in addition to the iGoogle gadget feature. Unfortunately, this tool is not able to share a gadget with an embedded search box with the above tool from the same author. As a result, there is no way to add the Search Wizard to an existing gadget. However, for those who do not want to use the Search Wizard, you can still add an embedded search box to a page or post using the iGoogle gadget tool. @virchelle - Thanks for the tip about the embedded search box. It may be possible to add the embedded search box to an existing gadget in future update. However, the Search Wizard tool is designed for specific purpose, allowing the user to perform complex queries on the web. For this reason, we find the embedded search box to be a more natural way to search the web. @Maxim - The Standalone Google Search tool includes a Mobile version. It is available in the Main & Search tool. But the embedded Google Search can be added to any page / gadget / post on a blog. If you are interested in using the Standalone Google Mobile for mobile phone browsing, you can download the mobile version of this tool from the iGoogle home page. In the last update of this tool, you can use the link "Insert Google Search Box" on the left side for adding an embedded Google Search box to your page. However, you might be able to do this using a Google Gadget as well. @Minz - You can add a Google Gadget to your page using Google Home page as described here: Thank you for all of your feedback on this tool.
