'Real Player Motion' captures player movement in-game Motion capture data used in FIFA is from a series of 96 players who participated in high-intensity football matches, including a Champions League game between Liverpool and Manchester United. These players were captured using motion capture suits that detect the player's individual movements with incredible accuracy, and also capture their biomechanics. When these data are combined with the power of EA SPORTS FIFA engine, you get a true representation of how the world's best footballers move and perform on the pitch. FIFA Hype or FIFA Faux? The technology used in FIFA has been recreated completely from scratch, rather than being used as a digital facsimile of a real player. The result is that the ball, pitch, crowds, stadiums and the audio in-game is all 100% accurate. Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... Loading... Enter the fray The industry-leading motion capture technology enables us to dynamically place players in the right spot on the pitch at the right time. This means characters can move and interact naturally within the environment, providing a truly immersive experience. The aim was to provide a FIFA game that feels like playing on the real pitch with the best players on the planet. It's just that in real life, these players are not trying to win a match against any team in the world, but are trying to win against other players. Creating authentic World Class FIFA gameplay The key features of "Real Player Motion" are to ensure the actual playing style of each player and the influence their shape and style of play has on game outcomes. FIFA's gameplay engine allows this to be done through match physics where all players interact with the environment as they would in real life. The physics engine is also responsible for correctly recreating player interaction with the ball, and reacting to it accordingly. Match engine software delivers this interaction. In addition to using actual real-life player movement data, many other elements have been recreated to create the most authentic experience possible. FIFA 22 Serial Key introduces "HyperMotion Technology," which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. The technology used in FIFA has been recreated completely from
