The FBI has opened a criminal investigation into the death of a missing Malaysian airliner, as investigators race to identify who in the plane's jet path with the most powerful radar technology are now believed to have shot it down by mistake. The Boeing 777 disappeared from radar screens early Saturday, plunging from the sky over the Ukraine with 239 people aboard, including 154 Chinese citizens. On Sunday, Vietnamese authorities said all nine bodies found by a beach had been confirmed dead. AP The AP reported that at the center of the mystery was Ukraine's border with Russia where the plane was headed. The plane's unexplained disappearance left eight more pages of the flight recorders, with many questions surrounding whether the pilot intentionally diverted the jet from its course. A Russian missile is believed to be the most likely cause of the disaster. Investigators said the wreckage did not show signs of any modern missile attack and it is unlikely that a surface-to-air missile would have survived such a massive crash. However, recent revelations about Malaysia Airlines' relationship with Ukraine, specifically a Boeing that provides Kiev with military equipment and a maintenance contract, might have spurred the emergency inquiry, The Wall Street Journal reported, citing two U.S. officials. Malaysian investigators were working to analyze the black box data. But analysts said they would have to decode the voice recordings to know what may have happened. Malaysia Airlines was conducting an "extensive review" of its procedures following the tragedy and would cooperate fully with the investigation. AP The airline also said it was cooperating with the investigation. "All time-critical duties, including the resolution of this incident and the subsequent investigation, are being carried out by our very capable and experienced management and technical staff," it said in a statement on its website. Officials believe it is highly unlikely that the plane broke up over the sea because the plane's black boxes and flight data recorders were not found and the wreckage was spread out over a vast area, not in one location. The search area covered three seas over
