The present invention relates to a semiconductor chip package, and more particularly to a multilayer type semiconductor chip package. Most of prior art semiconductor chip packages, especially to those for driver ICs are provided with only one ground plane in a conductive pattern on a substrate. Therefore, there are some areas where the ground voltage is lacking, e.g. the border area where the semiconductor chip and the substrate are connected. It is desirable that both the ground voltage and the power voltage are provided in the border area. U.S. Pat. No. 5,473,448 discloses a semiconductor chip package having an additional ground plane in the substrate. However, the additional ground plane is merely connected to the ground, and other ground planes remain unconnected. U.S. Pat. No. 4,921,244 discloses a semiconductor chip package having two ground planes arranged in parallel. However, the ground planes are connected to only the power voltage. It is desirable to have a configuration for both the ground voltage and the power voltage in the border area. U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,686,996 and 5,818,907 disclose a multilayer type semiconductor chip package having a power voltage line which can be connected with a ground voltage line. However, there is no disclosure as to how to provide a ground voltage without the ground plane. Accordingly, one object of the present invention is to provide a semiconductor chip package having two ground planes on a substrate. Another object of the present invention is to provide a semiconductor chip package having a ground voltage and a power voltage at least in the border area of the substrate. A further object of the present invention is to provide a semiconductor chip package having a ground and power voltage at least in the border area of the substrate. A further object of the present invention is to provide a semiconductor chip package having a first ground and a second ground at least in the border area of the substrate. To achieve the above objects, the present invention provides a semiconductor chip package comprising a first substrate with a plurality of connecting holes, a second substrate with a plurality of connecting holes, a plurality of external connection pads, a semiconductor chip with a plurality of connection pads, a plurality of power pins, a plurality of signal pins, and a plurality of ground pads. Each of the power pins has a first portion protruded from the second substrate and a second

Professional Development: A Contribution to the Debate Article excerpt "The best explanation I have ever heard for why we need "counselors" - i.e. professional practitioners with sophisticated and extensive training - to assist an insecure child with his or her fear of certain situations comes from a friend who works for the federal government. This friend told me she found herself, as the result of an accident, crippled for life. When she told her family about her new affliction, her father asked why she didn't take up dancing. 'Dancing is what I was meant to do,' she replied. So she started dancing. Her family went crazy. They thought that because she had such a difficult time with certain situations, that her inability to dance was due to a 'disability.' No, she told them. It was her beauty. Her gift. It was something she was meant to do. Her life was no less valuable because she couldn't dance. She may not have been able to dance at all had she not been crippled. The point is, after their initial shock, her family eventually embraced her. And so it is with our kids." (Hammond, Our Kids, 130) Debate over the need for counseling in schools has become contentious during the past couple of decades. Professionals in education have been sounding the alarm about the situation, and certain professionals - such as teacher leaders - have been bucking the trend and pushing for counseling programs. For these advocates, the need for counseling in schools is twofold. First, there is the issue of "social climate in schools" and "stress." Second, there is the issue of youth violence and delinquency and their far-reaching consequences in and on society. Debate within the broader field of education has been passionate. There have been well-written articles pro and con. For a long time, the debate over the need for counseling and counseling programs in schools was considered largely regional and small-scale. Of course, now that these programs are operating in states and large school districts in an effort to combat increasing rates of violent behavior, attention to the issue has grown. As the debate continues, and greater attention is directed toward the need for counseling in schools, certain issues are becoming increasingly important. ...Dekai Parsi, a San Francisco native, was encouraged to run for governor in 2014, but U.S. Rep.
